A Workable Moral Strategy for Achieving and Preserving World Peace: A Strategy That Can Create Over 500,000 American Jobs Raymond G. Wilson

Proposed here is a workable moral strategy that would solve many problems the world faces, including the war problem. This strategy is a comprehensive alternative approach to the most pressing domestic and foreign priorities of the world's nations. It is an alternative that creates advantages for the working people of the world and at the same time provides advantages to the social, industrial, financial, and defense complexes of world nations, and it does so without “damaging” such complexes. This workable strategy provides a remedy to unemployment throughout the world; it will put back to work the original creators of the world's wealth, initially well more than a million of them, half in the United States. It will reestablish worldwide markets for peacetime products of American manufacture. Additionally, this moral strategy is probably the only approach, for decades or centuries to come, by which people of the Less Developed world, in peace, without war, can become their own masters, can create the sensible path to their own destinies, as so many other nations have, and live to enjoy some of it. This workable moral strategy exports no United State's or other nation's money; it fosters the expressed desires of all people and nations seeking peace, opportunity, and a better life.
